Ever since subscribing to XM radio over a year and a half ago, I have had nothing but pleasant experiences with the programming and services offered by this company. The variety they offer cannot be beat, and because of that has given me countless hours of enjoyment instead of having to search the dial for anything decent on normal radio. Since the creation of their weather and traffic service, the daily commute has improved for me. I get weather and traffic when I want it where I want it, and know that I can switch whenever I want to. XM radio surely is the innvention of the 21st century, and it is clear that the National Association of Broadcasters are only trying to put down what they didnt come up with, and what they can't compete against. These bullies sure seem quite childlike.
